Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

Twenty-five years ago, communication between people was very different from communication today. To call friends quickly, we used a telephone to ring them. If time was not important, we wrote a letter and sent it by post. For fast written communication, people sent faxes.

Although many people still use these ways of communication, they are becoming less common because of the new technologies. Today, the most widespread forms of personal and business communication are mobile phone calls, text messages and e-mails. Many people now use smart phones with computers which can connect to the Internet and send e-mails.

The only thing that we can be sure of is that technology is not going to stand still. Scientists continue inventing new, more complex ways of communication. Visual communication is an example. Small mobile computers with fast Internet connections are the first mobile devices that give us high-quality visual communication, so that we can see the people we are talking to.

By the year 2032, scientists predict that we will be able to communicate by the power of thought. A special helmet connected to our brain will turn what we are thinking of into a digital form enabling us to communicate to other people that we know.
