Jenny, a graphic designer who usually worked from home and rarely needed to leave her house, decided to buy a new laptop for her design work. The store was having a sale that you could only get if you went there yourself, and since her car was in the garage for repairs, Jenny had to take public transport which was a rare adventure for her.

Carrying her small bag, with just enough money to buy the laptop, she set off for the train station. Feeling nervous and uncomfortable, Jenny kept a close eye on her bag. The crowded train made her feel worried, and she kept checking again and again to make sure her bag was safe.

As the train crowded, Jenny suddenly felt a knock against her side. A wave of fear hit her when she noticed that her bag was missing. Her heart raced, but she quickly decided to stay calm and think logically. Next to her stood a young man who looked equally uncomfortable in the crowd. With a smile, Jenny talked loudly to herself, "If someone stole my bag, all they're getting is old tickets and a shopping list!" As she scanned the area, Jenny saw something shiny under the seat: it was her bag. It had simply dropped in the crowd. She picked it up, feeling happy and relaxed to find everything safe.

When the train reached her stop, Jenny stepped off with a smile. The unexpected adventure had made her nervous, but she arrived at the store safely, ready to buy her new laptop.
