Being a zoo keeper or an animal trainer is a fun and interesting job. Zoo keepers take care of animals by feeding them, cleaning their living places, and keeping them healthy. They work with many kinds of animals, from lions and tigers to birds. Each animal needs special care, so zoo keepers must know a lot about them. For example, some animals need to eat certain foods, and others need special spaces to sleep or play.

Animal trainers teach animals how to follow instructions. Trainers might teach dolphins to jump or birds to fly to specific places. They often use rewards, like food, to help animals learn. Training is important because it helps animals stay energetic and healthy. It also makes it easier for zoo keepers to take care of them.

Working at a zoo is hard work but can also be very exciting. Zoo keepers and trainers spend time outside, learning about nature and helping animals live better. They must always be careful and patient because animals need much care and patience.
