Hana was never the top student in her class. She had trouble with math and felt nervous during exams even though her parents encouraged her. Her classmates didn't expect much from her, and sometimes she believed them. But one day, the Math teachers told the classes about a school competition: students had to solve a number of math puzzles. The winner would travel with his parents to represent the school in a national competition which made the students excited. They saw it as a chance to prove themselves and show what they had learned.

Hana wanted to try, but she was afraid of failing the competition. Still, she decided to practise every day. She stayed after school, asked questions, and watched online videos to understand the problems. Slowly, she began to get better. Her teacher noticed her progress and encouraged her to keep going. Hana also started helping her classmates with difficult questions, which made her feel more confident.

On the day of the school competition, Hana felt nervous but ready. She focused hard and solved each puzzle with care. When the results were announced, everyone was shocked; Hana had won although nobody expected that.

She went on to the national competition and won the third place. Her photo was in the school's official Instagram profile, and her classmates cheered for her. Her parents were proud, and her teacher gave her a certificate of achievement. Hana was invited to speak at the school morning assembly, where she shared her journey and encouraged others to believe in themselves.
