Kara Swisher is a writer and a mother of four children. She knows a lot about technology and has even written a book called Burn Book: A Tech Story about her experiences working with technology companies.

Kara lately talked about a new rule in her recent book. It would stop children under 14 from using social media unless their parents allow it. This is a good idea. Social media can be like eating candies which is very hard to stop. She believes social media can sometimes make kids feel sad or upset. She says it can be hard for children to stop using social media once they start it.

Kara also thinks the leaders of the country should make stronger rules for social media companies to help keep kids safe. Some people want to block apps like TikTok because they believe they are not good for children. Kara says that these must follow careful safety rules.

Kara also advises children to spend time doing other fun activities, like reading, playing sports, or spending time with family and friends. She believes balance is important. Technology should be used in ways that help us learn and stay connected.
