Starting a new school year or moving to a new school can be exciting, but it also brings challenges. One common worry for students is how to make new friends. Friendships at school are important because they help us feel included, supported, and less lonely. Having good friends at school can make it more fun and even help us do better in our studies. It's also helpful to think about the qualities you value in a friend.

Making friends at school usually takes a lot of effort. You can meet new students in your classroom or during breaks. But, by joining a school sports team, you will meet those who share your similar interests. Starting a conversation with someone new might feel scary, but being friendly and respectful helps. If someone doesn't respond well, don't give up. Stay kind and open-minded. Every student is different, and not every attempt will lead to a close friendship. If you feel shy, try to listen carefully and show interest in others. Being a good listener is a great way to communicate.

Friendship works both ways. It's not just about finding people who like you - it's also about being a caring and an honest friend. Trust and honesty are the keys to strong relationships. Sometimes friends disagree, but solving problems calmly and kindly with them is important. Asking yourself questions like "What does friendship mean to me?" can help you understand your role and responsibility in a friendship. With patience and courage, you can build long lasting friendships.
